Trade in Appomattox.

48 YEARS Ago This Month

L. E. Smith opened business in Appomattox. The "First Stand" was in a small shop in the old frame building, since destroyed by fire, on the lot next to the depot. Appomattox was called Nebraska then. Later it became West Appomattox. From the beginning 48 years ago, the business has steadily grown, and now has one of the best trades in this section. Looking back over the years, there is nothing that means more to us than the loyal friends these years of merchandising have brought us and on this anniversary we wish to thank you for your liberal patronage and pledge you our constant effort to worl with you for the good of Appomattox. Madison Clark Caldwell, the subject of this sketch, entered into his heavenly Home one year ago, Feb. 23rd., 1934, when a tragic accident, not to a falling tree on his own place, caused instant death.

Mr. Caldwell had been long and prominently connected in Appomattox, in which county he spent his useful life. He was an industrious and an efficient farmer, having made a study of agriculture.

For many years he had been a faithful and consistent member of Liberty Baptist church, and it was from this church that his son, Clark, went out as a promising young minister. When a short time afterward this son died suddenly and untimely death, the father was overwhelmed with a grief from which he never recovered.

They live from work to greater work

When rest before their noon-Ah, God is very good to them,

They do not die too soon."

Indeed, such might have been written concerning this noble young minister.

Mr. Caldwell bore himself with quiet dignity. A refined, gentle nature, he was retiring and self-effacing in his conduct. In his dealings with the public he was just and kind. Neighbors and friends mourn his loss. To his family he was a devoted husband and father, and they whose hearts know the anguish of separation ceaselessly long for the touch of a vanished hand; the sound of a voice that is still.

But he has left to us the priceless heritage of a good name and an example worthy of emulation.

CALDWELL. MADISON CLARK

In sad, but loving memory of our dear husband and father, who died one year ago today, February 23, 1934.
There is a family who misses you sadly,
And the time long since you went,
And when think of you daily and hourly,
But try to be brave, and content.
But the tears we shed in silence
And breathe A sigh of regret,
For you were dirt and ew remember
Though all the world forget.

Seed Cleaning Machine Is Installed Here

Hardware Co. Puts In Machine To Help Farmers Have Beteer Seed

Farmers in this section of the state should be especially interested in the announcement on page 8 today, of the installation by the Appomattox Hardware Company of a seed cleaning machine.

This machine is the only one in this section and is expected to be a big boost to the program of making the production of certified seed as a cash crop.

The local firm invites growers throughout this section of Virginia to bring seed here to be cleaned. It has remarkable speed and large quantities can be handled. The charge is very nominal.

The Bank as a Rebuilder

IN place of a 3 per cent loss on an investment of $40,000 a large New York savings bank is now getting 6 per cent profit on an investment of $80,000, because it had the good business judgment to spend $40,000 in modernizing a group of 50-year-old tenement houses on the lower East Side which it was forced to take over on mortgage foreclosure, says an article in the American Bankers Association Journal. A year or two ago the owner, who had always kept up his mortgage payments, began to neglect the property, it became run down and the tenants began to leave.

Improvement Club

Last week the Improvement Club was organized in the home of Miss Louise Gills, where it is conducted each Monday and Wednesday from 2 to 5:30 and on Tuesday evening from 7 to 10. The object is to bring about improvement in every phase of living, physically, mentally and spiritually. Special emphasis is given to improving the intellect. Current events, everyday errors in grammer, pronunciation and spelling, short story classics, history and the historical novel are among the subjects to be discussed. All those interested are cordially invited to attend these meetings.

Concrete Silos Can Be Put Into Good Condition

Concrete silos which have softened and sloughed off on the inside due to the use of too little cement or to mistakes in mixing or handling the concrete, can be repaired by chipping off the defective material with hammer and cold chisel, soaking the concrete thoroughly several times, crushing with a cream-like grouting of cement and water, then plastering with rich cement mortar.

If the defective concrete extends clear through the silo walls, says a writer in the Montreal Herald, the entire wall can be replaced by cutting out a section at a time and replacing it with good material. When these sections are set thoroughly, the remaining parts can be replaced in the same way.

Leakage of air through silo walls is a common cause of moldy silage. Hollow tile, concrete blocks and concrete stave silos are often coated with a cement and water wash with the idea of stopping such air leaks; but this does little good, since any cracks will open up again as soon as the pressure comes on the walls. What is needed is a more elastic coating, which will stretch slightly.

Mosquitoes on Farms

A common source of mosquitoes on farms is ponds which provide drinking water for live stock. Obviously, it is inadvisable to treat these ponds with poisonous substances, kerosene, or other material which will impart a taste to the water which would be revolting to live stock, and to drain them of course is also out of the question. If such ponds are made deep enough so that they will not dry up frequently during summer fish can be introduced which will feed on the larvae of mosquitoes.

Slat or Trench Silo

The farmer who wants a cheap silo for storing his fodder, corn or other roughage this year may take his choice of two kinds, both very inexpensive and easy to make, and quite satisfactory when correctly used. One is the trench silo; the other is the cornerib or snow fence type. Directions for locating, building and filling both kinds of temporary silos are available from county agents. Trench silos are better adapted to clay soils than to other types of soils. They must be located so that surface water will drain away. They are cheap to fill because no blower is needed. Crib silos are easier to build, but require more purchased material. Lining crib silos with building paper reduces spoilage of the ensilage near the outside.

The Whale Sharks Largest

The whale shark, rarest as well as largest of all fishes, is estimated to grow to a length of 70 feet, has a mouth large enough to engulf a man and possesses some 6,000 teeth, but they are all microscopic! This greatest of all gill breathers is harmless to man and lives almost entirely upon plankton, the minute fauna of the sea.

What's It Worth?

The long-awaited gold decision of the supreme court was handed down Monday, but some local folks are still wondering what gold is worth. Last week two men were in Appomattox buying up all forms of gold, and gave one local lady $3.25 for a $2.50 gold piece.

Less Milk Used When Not Fresh

Adequate Cooling, Bottling, Will Cause Cream to Rise Faster.

By A. C. Kinney, Extension Dairyman, Virginia Polytechnic Institute.—WNU Service.

The rapid rooting of milk handled carelessly has been given as a chief reason why milk consumption is low on many farms.

Unsanitary and slightly soured milk is not palatable and it is easy to see why farm families whose milk is not cared for properly do not use as much milk as they should.

To keep milk clean and fresh, it should be strained through at least three thicknesses of fine cheese cloth immediately after milking. It should then be poured in standard-size quart milk bottles and sealed with standard bottle caps.

Then the bottles should be placed in the coldest water available and allowed to cool. The water should be changed as often as necessary to bring the milk rapidly to the temperature of the water.

On farms where ice is kept, the milk should be placed in the ice box after it has been cooled by water. Where ice is not kept, milk should be left in cold water until it is to be used.

The cream can be poured from the bottles and kept for churning or other purposes. The rapid cooling of milk in bottles will cause the cream to rise more quickly and completely than is the case when milk is not cooled and where it is stored in large vessels, such as buckets or cans.

Milk thus handled is completely sealed from dust, odors, or other forms of contamination. It will be found much more convenient for the housewife to handle in bottles than in the usual way.

Scares Off Thieves

A series of gasolene thefts came near being solvd here Tuesday night when W. P. Cannon took a few shots at thieves who at 11:30 I. M. were seen drainging gasolene from the car of R. E. Lawson, Mr. Cannon's next door neighbor.

For many months the stealing of gasolene from residents cars at night has been a prevalent nuisance in Appomattox.

It is understood that many other citizens are arming themselves and are prepared to shoot such thieves at sight.

THROUGH A Woman's Eyes

By JEAN NEWTON

BURNING THE BOOKS

I HAVE just come across an old Roman legend relating how the Cumaean sibyl offered Tarquin the Proud nine books—at a price. Tarquin refused them.

The sibyl burned three of the books —and offered him the remaining six. But the price was the same! Naturally he laughed at her.

Then she burned three more and offered him the remainder at the same price she had asked for the nine. This time he paid the price.

And, of course—as there would be no story!—the books were found to be vitally important sources of information on Roman policy, which he sorely needed, and the most valuable were those that had been destroyed.

I shall preach no moral on lost opportunities. But that ancient story does point right at so many people we know in this modern day, who fail to value things until they become of us—or pass up that offer that is made so freely that it seems cheap. Sometimes something bought or a vegrant inspiration impels us to pick up that thread; and we may find that what we thought cheap was precious, only undervalued—until something of it was destroyed.

There are many things in life about which it is costly to be casual, or careless, or arrogant, as was that ancient ruler about books which held the answer to his needs. Things are not always valuable or important in proportion to how high their price or how easily they are within our reach.

Horse Has 40 Teeth

In order to help the purchaser of horses to determine to some extent the age of the animals being bought, the Department of Agriculture has issued a bulletin which illustrates the shape and condition of the teeth of the animal from the milk teeth on to the age of twenty years. The horse has 40 teeth if equipped with his full complement, while mares for some reason have four less.
